THURSDAY, SEPT. 10th, 1891.

Another seat in the Legislative Assembly has been given to Eastern Assiniboina. This constituency is made up by a row of townships taken from the south of the electoral districts of Moosomin, Whitewood, and Wolseley, and two rows of townships from the north of Souris electoral district, and is called the Electoral District of Cannington.

Moose Jaw has not been divided as at first intended. Surely Mr. Davin will not claim credit for giving Eastern Assiniboina another seat in the Assembly.

Rates to Pacific Coast points as usual

$10 and $5 lower than by any other route.

Our business men feel the need of a chartered bank very much, and we have no doubt if some of the bank managers whose business is carried on in the Territories were to make a visit to our town and interview some of our leading men they would find a very profitable business could be done here. There are no branches doing business between Regina and Moosomin, and we feel that one established here would not do a very good business but be of advantage to the town. We will have at least a quarter of a million bushels of wheat marketed here. A very large business is done in purchasing cattle for the eastern market, and probably in no town in the Territories are more horses disposed of.

The settlers who were unable to obtain a full quarter section as a homestead when they landed here, owing to the then existing regulations, must feel that their rights have not been overlooked by the Minister of the Interior. Mr. Dewdney has succeeded in having the objectional provisions of the Land Regulations removed. The pioneer settler, to whose untiring efforts to develop the country the greatest consideration at the hands of the Government is due, must see that his rights have been respected and everything consistent with the best interests of the country done to promote his individual welfare.

We believe that the people of Eastern Assiniboina are satisfied that Mr. Dewdney has given every possible attention to the interests of his constituency, and we also think that throughout the Territories his administration of the Department of Interior has been generally satisfactory. In framing the North-West Bill, and making amendments to the Land Laws, the Minister had valuable assistance from the western members, all of whom did probably as much to bring about these changes as Mr. Davin who claims all the credit for what has been done. We think Mr. Davin did well, Extraordinary Death of a Soldier.

A FOOLISH WAGER.

Tragic Affair in Buckinghamshire.

THROWING A LAMP AT A WIFE.

William Wilkinson, a bugler in the 1st Worcester Artillery Volunteers, encamped near Conway, was drowned on Wednesday afternoon when bathing in the Conway river. Several others who were with him had narrow escapes.

The East Surrey coroner has been informed of the death of Alf. John Hood, a private of the Coldstream Guards. Deceased jumped over Westminster Bridge on Sunday night to escape a picket which had arrested him as a deserter, and was drowned.

During a severe thunderstorm which passed over Croydon on Monday afternoon a man who had taken refuge under a tree was struck by lightning and killed. His head was torn open and his boots stripped from his feet. He was standing under a tree and was seen to fall by a passer-by.

The police authorities at Devonport on Tuesday effected the arrest of John Gray, until recently a detective-superintendent at Newcastle, who was wanted on a warrant issued against him with a demand of £36. Gray was identified as the military agent by some artillerymen. When arrested he admitted that he was the man wanted.

At Manchester Assizes Tuesday, John Elwes, a gentleman of education, was found guilty of killing his mother with a revolver at Hordle. Medical evidence was given that prisoner was insane, and the other members of his family were insane, and he was ordered to be detained during His Majesty's pleasure.

A bank holiday excursionist to London had an embarrassing experience. He found himself in Piccadilly minus his watch and chain and over £20 in money. He was left without so much as a pen in his pockets, and after walking the streets all night had to borrow a few shillings from a stranger in order to communicate with his friends in Yorkshire. The thief is supposed to be a woman, who has not been arrested.

The man, William Adams, for whom the police are searching, is still at large, and although he is well known in the district, nothing has transpired regarding his whereabouts. It is the opinion of some that Adams, who is of a very excitable disposition, is a likely man to commit suicide.

Lewis, who was also stabbed by Adams, is progressing favourably.

At the Prince of Wales Colliery, Pontefract, on Wednesday, a pulley at the head gear broke, letting a car drop some 250 yards down the shaft. This broke all the shaft gearing, and imprisoned between two and three hundred men in the pit. Steps were immediately taken to rescue the men impaled by the twisted shaft, but it was expected that it would be late at night before the men could be brought to the surface.

Friday night George Phillips, a fisherman, of Wansbeck, who had been for some time eccentric and intemperate habits, laid a wager that he would swim across the Earle Ponds, Snaresbrook, a well-known expanse of water. He divested himself of his clothes, save his trousers, and swam to swim while in a drunken state. For a few strokes he went along all right, but suddenly disappeared. The body was not recovered until Saturday morning.

At Brighton, on Saturday, Charles Mitchell, the pugilist, was charged with assaulting Police Constable Halewhile in the execution of his duty. Mitchell appeared in the dock with a blood-stained shirt, and the policeman had his nose strapped and appeared to have been seriously injured. The constable deposed that early in the morning he saw the defendant struggling with two women, whom he interposed, defendant struck him, and wounded him severely. Mitchell was fined £5 and costs.

A serious affray between soldiers took place at Portsmouth on Sunday night. It seems the same men belonging to Royal Inniskillers met a party from the Yorkshire Regiment, and an alteration ensued. Words led to blows, and belts and sticks were freely used. Eventually the police appeared on the scene, and the men dispersed. Four of them received severe punishment, and they were taken to the police station, where their wounds were dressed by the police-surgeon.

A tragic occurrence took place at Downley, near High Wycombe, on Tuesday evening. Joseph Sharpe, aged 35, general dealer, was at home with his wife, while the remainder of the family went to West Wycombe flower show. About half past eight a man passing the house heard a shot. Mrs. Sharpe ran to the window, and saw a珠子 who had been arrested, had only a short time before borrowed a gun from a neighbor.

On Saturday morning a prize fight took place at Portman Square. Sunday night, it seems the same men belonging to Royal Inniskillers met a party from the Yorkshire Regiment, and an alteration ensued. Words led to blows, and belts and sticks were freely used. Eventually the police appeared on the scene, and the men dispersed. Four of them received severe punishment, and they were taken to the police station, where their wounds were dressed by the police-surgeon.

Wednesday night an old woman named Ellen Cox died at Epsom Union Infirmary from wounds alleged to have been inflicted by three men on Monday morning. The woman was in a parlour, when a blow or two and several wounds upon her body, and covered with blood. She stated that three men followed her from a neighboring public-house in the previous night, attempted to rob her of a shilling, and assaulted and wounded her when she resisted. The police are investigating the story.

late Saturday night, George Fisher, of Morris Street, West Bromwich, was arrested by the police, charged with a shocking outrage upon his wife, Ann Fisher. The husband and wife quarrelled, when it was alleged the prisoner picked up a lighted lamp from the table and threw it at her, with the result that she was immediately enveloped in flames and was shockingly burnt. On Sunday night the woman's condition was so serious that the police deemed it advisable to take her depostions at the hospital. The prisoner was remanded.

A singular incident happened at Liverpool Police Court on Wednesday. Peter Steelman was charged with libelling William Fox. Since he was employed describing him as an "unmitigated scoundrel," and similar language. Defendant apologized and withdrew the charges, and was ordered to pay the costs. He said he could not do so. A young and well-dressed lady suddenly rose and, stepping into the witness-box, said she would pay, adding, "He is a blackguard though all the same."

On Sunday, at Canbury Road, Rams gate, a terrible tragedy was enacted. Mrs. Merriman murdered her little daughter, aged five, by almost severing the neck from the body. After attempting to poison herself the woman leaped from the front door window. She was removed to the Infirmary, where she was treated by Dr. Bassett. Besides the effects of poison the unfortunate woman was suffering from a fractured leg and injuries to her head. After lingering for three hours she died.

When the Emperor Nicholas quitted England in 1844, after staying a week, of which two days were passed at Windsor, he left six gold snuff-boxes with his portrait set in diamonds for the Lords of the Household; six gold snuff-boxes with his portrait set in diamonds for the four Knights of the Garter; a diamond ring, £200 for the servants at the Castle; a purse of diamonds, worth £100, for the housekeeper; an enormous number of valuable rings, watches, and brooches; £1000 for the Society for Relief of Distressed Foreigners, £1000 for the German Hospital, £200 for the poor of St. George's Parish, and £200 for various charities and public works.

A chancery was called up to twice o'clock this morning, the judge of the ring of the night before.

On opening the door he found a servant who told him that she was to a picnic that morning there would only be a few lost ones, aimlessly tearing about, apparently looking for the main body which had just decamped. Usually these rascals run away after a few hours.

"Their astonishment therefore," continued Mr. Barlow, "was all the greater when they saw him on board the Circassia as the vessel was steaming out of the Mersey. Mrs. Kennedy knew who it was by the heightened colour in Adeline's face, and by the look of joy which flashed into her eyes when they fell upon him. There was sadness in Mrs. Kennedy's eyes, and her face palied, as she realised the situation. 'Introduce us,' she said to Adeline, and the young lady went and spoke to him, and came back, saying that he would rather not be introduced, as she had thrown herself upon his hands. But Adeline's reply was of putting it, and rather a mean way, too, of getting out of a difficulty; and, of course, Mrs. Kennedy could not wait a second time for an introduction. She could find out his name, however, through the passenger list, and she did. It was Mr. Julius Clifford. So here we have them in company on board the Circassia. Mr. Julius Clifford and Miss Adeline Duxbury."

"They were very much together during that voyage. Mrs. Kennedy, being a bad sailor, could not stand up in the cabin with them, but she heard it from the other passengers, and Adeline's blithe spirits showed that she was happy and again under his influence. The deplorable question now with Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy was whether Adeline would go with them to the West. They asked her, and she said, without hesitation, 'Where else should I go?' Where else, indeed? And your friend, Mr. Clifford?" asked Mrs. Kennedy. "He has some very good qualities," she answered, "which will detain him a week or two, and then he is coming on to America. All safety was provided; he had anticipated the questions, and had directed her how to answer them. Believing she spoke the truth the Kennedys were put off their guard, which was just what Mr. Clifford wanted, and when they arrived in New York neither he nor Adeline was to be found. The Kennedys were deeply grieved, but they were powerless; Adeline was not their daughter, she was seven years, and her own mistress; they had no right to interfere with her. But Adeline had been intent on running in New York only one night, and to start the following day for the West; but they remained a week, hunting for the misgoverned girl. I don't know what good they expected to do when they found her, but they had a duty to perform, and they performed it. They had almost given her up in despair when they met her and Mr. Clifford in Central Park. Mr. Clifford would have hurried Adeline away, but Mrs. Kennedy stood in their path. 'What is your pleasure?' asked Mr. Clifford. 'Let me speak to you, Adeline,' said Mrs. Kennedy. 'Speak, then,' said Mr. Clifford. 'Adeline and I have no secrets from each other.' Mrs. Kennedy wished to ask Adeline if she was married, but she did not dare to put the question in the presence of Mr. Clifford; it was just what Mr. Clifford wanted, and such was his power over her that she repeated his words as he had repeated Mrs. Kennedy's. 'Our movements,' said Mr. Clifford, 'are secret. Though I have little doubt that a moment before she did not know whether there were or not. You have our address,' said Mrs. Kennedy. Then she held out her hand, and Adeline took it and pressed it warmly. Perhaps at that moment the recollection of all that Mrs. Kennedy had done for her came to her mind. She offered her hand also to Mr. Clifford, and he, after a little hesitation, accepted it; and so they would have parted, but when Mrs. Kennedy turned and walked away a few steps, Adeline ran after her and kissed her with a rushing upon her face, and then ran back to Mr. Clifford. Bitten by Mrs. Kennedy reproach herself afterwards for her want of courage in not asking Adeline if she was married; had the answer been what it should have been, she would have left Adeline with a lighter heart. Had it been what it should not have been, she might have made some effort to save her, even at that late day. As it was she left her beloved daughter, beset with sad doubts, I think I can say to Millington, that want to say something."

"I do," I said. "When Mr. Haldane told me that Mr. Clifford and Miss Duxbury lived together in New York, she bearing his name with his cognisance and consent, and making purchases in his name for which he paid, I told him it was as good as a marriage, though no ceremony was performed."

"Is that the law?"

"It is the law in the State of New York," I replied.

"Ah, and what did Mr. Haldane reply?"

"That Mr. Clifford had already heard some news to that effect."

"Some nonsense to that effect," repeated Mr. Barlow. "Denying that he did not believe anything of the kind."

"That was what he intended to convey."

"We will prolong this interruption, Millington. I take it that you are satisfied that the account Mr. Haldane gave you of the transaction between Mr. Clifford and Miss Duxbury on board the Circassia is false."

"Most certainly."

"It follows, then, that some other things related to you are false."

"Yes, I should say so."

"He is a fool," said Mr. Barlow, "and something worse than a fool. You asked me, when I commenced my story, whether I had succeeded in discovering Mr. Clifford. I answered that up to the hour of closing my office, I had not discovered him. I should give you a different answer now."

"Yes, and here is my reason. It is my deliberate opinion that Mr. Julius Clifford is no other than Mr. Haldane himself."

CHAPTER XIV.

Mr. Barlow had put in plain words a suspicion which had crossed my mind. He was not a man who was wise after the event and I did not question the conclusion at which he had so promptly arrived.

"We have to consider," he continued, "what induces a client to be stupidly deceived the agent he employs. A kind of man who acts in this way is either a man of weak character or a man's son or a man with pride and conceit that is, cannot admit, even to an utter stranger that he has done something of which he ought to be ashamed. But pride very often has a tail, and your man of weak character more often than not finds that he is in the wrong box, with the key turned upon him. The story Mr. Haldane related to you, Adeline Duxbury, black and white proves her an adventurous, and himself a honourable man. Now, my belief is that he has his friend Mr. Redwood is birds of a feather with this difference—that Mr. Haldane has seen his wild oats, and Mr. Redwood is still sowing. It is reaping time with Mr. Haldane. Something has threatened him; he is frightened of the past; there are skeleton. My only solace is forgetfulness, oblivion, and I seek it shamefully. Disgrace. I am glad you cannot write to me, that you do not know where to find me. But do not quite forget me. Think of me, not as I am, but as I might have been if I had been grateful for all your goodness to me, if I had shown you obedience. —Your unhappy Adeline."

"So far," said Mr. Barlow, "these four letters tell a plain story, and upon the receipt of the last Mrs. Kennedy, stirred by my desire to learn more about the man in search of Adeline. Her husband, would have come in her place, but to leave the new home he was establishing would have been utterly ruin to his prospects so he yielded to his wife's solicitations, and allowed her to undertake a duty which they both recognised and acknowledged. She had very little money to prosecute her inquiries, and as might have been expected in consequence of that, and with clues so slight to guide her, she was unsuccessful. Not the slightest trace of Adeline could she find, and she was compelled to return to America again when she came. Meanwhile—Mr. Barlow paused as we heard the street door open and shut—'Mean-while,' he continued, 'here is George come home, hungry for supper, and I feel peckish myself. Pop in at the office to-morrow afternoon at four o'clock, and you will hear some still more startling development. Well, George—as my lad entered the room—"what sort of a night?"

"My dear Mother—I am writing to you without my husband's knowledge—You will understand before I have finished," said Mr. Barlow, breaking off, and looking up from the faded letter he was reading, "why, although she speaks here of Mr. Clifford as her husband, I have spoken of her all through as Miss Duxbury."

"Mrs. Kennedy and her son, were presented by Mrs. Braggs. Life in your case seems to be one long vacation." Weary Watkinson. "Quite right you are, mam. I guess that's one reason why I am allers so tired."

Poverty-stricken Suitor. "Be mine, Armande, and I will treat you like an angel—Armande—'I should think so! Nothing to eat and still less to wear. Not much!"

Whatever became of that greyhound you had?" "Killed himself." "Really?" Yes; tried to catch a fly on the small of his back and miscalculated. Bit him twice in two."

Watte—"I don't approve of this idea of burying every eminent citizen with a brass band." Potts—"It would not be so bad, though, if they'd bury a brass band with such eminent citizen."

The first thing a man does on reaching the new regions is to fondly rhapsodize over the beauty and purity of untrammeled nature. The next is to start back to town. "Where there is some fun going on."

"Mrs. Battiford is a most pleasant temperament woman," remarked Snappa to his wife. "What do you mean?" asked Mrs. Snappa, in a hurried tone. "Well, I saw her to-day wearing tight sleeves."

Chapley—"Elsie, wouldn't you like to sit on my knee?" Elsie—"No; but papa might." Chapley—"What makes you think that?" Elsie—"He told sister last night he would like nothing better than to sit on your neck."

Scene: A cheap restaurant in Paris. Waiter—"Have you any cats in this establishment?" "Yes, sir: two fine ones." "Bring them here!" The waiter does not know. "Now leave them here and order me a nice rabbit stew."

Ethel—"Jack and I hit on a fair better scheme than counting the stars last night." Clara—"What was it?" Ethel—"We watched the clouds and whenever one laid the moon gave me a kiss and I kept it till another cloud came up."

Ethel—"Jack and I hit on a fair better scheme than counting the stars last night."

Goldwin Smith and the Jews.

It does not often happen that an answer is forthcoming before a proposition is stated, or even that the reply is framed simultaneously with that which really meets. This unusual experience, however, has come to Prof. Goldwin Smith, whose "New Light on the Jewish Question," in the August number of the North American Review, is answered as fairly and fully by an article in the current number of the Forum, by Prof. M. I. A. Hourwich, a Russian Hebrew barrister, now living in the United States. The author of the article has been entered into between the writers or editors, to have the affirmative and negative sides of the proposition appear at the same time—a most improbable supposition. Dr. Smith's article is mainly devoted to establishing the two-on-one proposition that the persecution of the Jews in Russia is not in any sense a religious persecution, but that it is the result of the exactions and petty tyranny of the czar, who has wholly suppressed and wrung the poor people, and that they have risen in revolt against an alien race, who, despising honest toil, seek to live upon the hard-earned wages of their fellowmen. In a word, Dr. Smith claims that the persecution is a natural consequence, and that the Jew is suffering the just deserts of his deeds. Various authorities are quoted to prove that "persecution is not the tendency of the Russian or of the church to which he belongs, and that the Eastern Christians and their descendants are not inclined towards adherents of a faith differing from their own. Witnesses also are invoked to establish the position that the Jew is himself the aggressor, and that his sufferings, if not just in the strict sense of the term, are only what was naturally to be expected. Chief among those cited in this connection are the British consuls who were stationed in those Russian towns in which the disturbances took place in 1881, and whose report as regards to the conduct of the authorities bears heavily on the Jews in connection with the troubles of that unhappy period. It is serious, if not fatal objection to Dr. Smith's theory, however, that it assumes a degree of sympathy and interest on the part of the Russian authorities for the poor and unprivileged subjects of the realm, which is entirely out of harmony with the historical character of said authorities. It gives them credit for more feeling and a deeper sense of justice than their former acts warrant."

Smith, namely, that the Jews are being persecuted on account of their faith—at least that the accident of difference of faith is not the principal reason. But here again his argument ends. Dr. Smith speaks of the Jews as "a parasitic race," as "interesting themselves for the purpose of gain into the homes of other nations, while they retain a marked and repellent nationality of their own." Mr. Hourwich shows how the exactions and petty tyranny of the czar would be subjected to the unfeeling and unmerciful authorities of that which they were gunned down by.

From a number of careful tests it is made to ascertain the precise strength of anchor bolts set in Portland cement in the ordinary way, the fact appeared that the joint was really stronger than a stone. In this demonstration two-inch iron rods were set into the stones some eleven and one-half inches, and then subjected to the test. The first rod had a screw thread to improve the grip of the cement, and the cement began to yield at a load of 32,000 pounds, the breaking of the stone being at 40,000 pounds. With a plain, smooth rod, it was found that the cement began to yield at a load of 34,000 pounds, but the rock broke at 47,000 pounds. Thus, though the strength of the cement joint was not developed, it was inferred that, in a suitable setting, the cement joint on a smooth rod might be made to break the rod.

—AERONAUT HOGAN'S FALL FROM A BALLOON.

Detroit, Aug. 30.—Thousands of persons who visited the Detroit Exposition on Saturday witnessed so horrifying a sight that its reflection will be indefinitely impressed upon their minds during the rest of their lives. It was the death of Aeronaut John Hogan, caused by his falling from the balloon at a height from the earth estimated to be above half a mile. The balloon was inflated and tugging at the ropes in hands of a score of men holding it captive. Hogan stepped from his tent, took a firm hold of the trapeze ropes, and Prof. Bartholomew shouted the signal for all to let go. Instantly the massive bag filled with smoke and hot air ascended high above the buildings, with Hogan clinging to the ropes and struggling to get seated on the iron trapeze. "For God's sake, Hogan, get on the bar!" shouted Bartholomew. The aeronaut responded with a desperate but unsuccessful attempt. Higher and higher ascended the balloon, the man clinging to the ropes becoming to the eyes of the spectators a mere doll in the air, but seen to be still struggling to relieve the terrible strain on his arms caused by the swift upward flight of the ponderous body. Suddenly the great crowd shouted almost in one voice: "He is falling!" The faces around were blanched; men groaned with agony and women fainted at the frightful spectacle above. Hogan let go his hold and fell to the earth. At first in an erect position, then turning, he made several complete revolutions, grasping at the air, his flight downward increasing in speed. With arms and legs extended and with a crash plainly to be heard on the tower of the main building, he struck the ground—dead. The body bounded upward six feet and lay with the lower limbs eight feet from the place of striking. Not a sound was heard from his lips. A crowd gathered; the corner impaled a jury, the undertaker drove up, and in the space of less than half an hour Hogan walked from his tent to the fatal balloon and is carried to the morgue in his coffin. The agonizing thoughts that passed through his mind in that brief interval of time would probably fill volumes, but must forever remain a sealed book.
